OVERVIEW

On Sunday, April 24, the Governor presented his State of the State address at the State Capitol. Here are some excerpts from that speech related to early care and education and school-age care issues:

“Child care in this country, in this state, was in crisis long before the pandemic. But during the pandemic, it was those child care workers who were the first ones on the front lines to ensure that our children had a safe place to go, and their parents, if you remember, early on when we kept those open to make sure that police and firefighters and nurses and doctors had a place to take their children safely so that they could do the work to keep the rest of us going”.

“I want to thank all of you, Minnesota, for clearly protecting our child care industry better than any other state in the nation, but both parents and the number of especially women who had to leave the workforce over this issue and the number of providers who can’t make the economic numbers work behind this. We have a responsibility. Business is asking us to work on this. And we have a lot of bipartisan support to build the workforce behind the workforce that makes things go. When people are thinking about where they’re going to have a business or thinking about where they are going to live, to have Minnesota be known as we were during the pandemic and come out of it a state that is committed to child care and early education, is a hiring bonus to get people here and to create lives that they want to live”.

“Minnesota should be the best state in the country to raise a family. And we’re working to make that a reality. We’re making sure that our early childhood education is the best in the country by investing in everything from quality child care to pre-K and early education scholarships. We’re making sure that every child has that quality start, and every parent has a safe place and knows that their child is being taken care of. We put a budget in front of you that continues to focus on that workforce, that continues to focus on those early starts. And with the capacity we’re in, I remind everyone, without raising taxes, we have the capacity right now to expand pre-K to 23,000 more children, which is going to change lives for generations to come. It is children, and once we get them on that healthy start, once we get them on that path for success, we need to make sure that we are continuing to do our best.”
On Thursday, April 28, House and Senate leaders announced an agreement to replenish the state’s unemployment trust fund and provide bonuses to frontline workers, which would authorize $2.7 billion to fully replenish the unemployment insurance trust fund and $500 million for workers at a greater risk of contracting COVID while on the job, including child care workers. Gov. Tim Walz signed the measure into law Friday evening.

The agreement would send an estimated 667,000 workers checks of $750. The House will define the pool of workers eligible. Much of the funding for the agreement will come from federal American Rescue Plan dollars.
